Essay Question:

Plagiarism is currently a major issue for all universities. What is the problem, and how can it be dealt with?

Plagiarism is never going to go away but the points above show that there are things that universities can do to prevent it. By getting all the people at the institution (staff and students) on board with university policy about plagiarism then it will be easier for everyone involved to look out for it. Students can notice it when reading their own work and other students and lecturers can point it out when marking. By doing this everyone learns what plagiarism involves and how to prevent it. The various methods outlined all have their merits and all universities should adopt as many as possible. However, these have deliberately focussed on what can happen within the institutions. Perhaps the problem could also be approached in schools and colleges as students prepare for their university life. Plagiarism should be taught earlier on in education.
